ABSTRACT

An abstract is a concise yet comprehensive summary of a presentation, devoid of subheadings, indentation, or references, typically encapsulating the problem addressed, objectives, methodologies employed, major findings, and concluding remarks. It must maintain single-spacing in 12-point Times New Roman font. Bullet points, lists, or references should be avoided, with any necessary citations provided within brackets. SI units are preferred, with negative exponents (e.g., kgm⁻³) and zero before decimal points (e.g., 0.45). Chemical formulas should adhere to standard notation (e.g., CaCO₃). The initial segment of the abstract delineates the problem under scrutiny, elucidating the rationale for the research endeavor. The study's purpose is to resolve this issue and/or enhance the discipline's comprehension of the matter. Subsequently, the abstract outlines the research methodologies employed. It then delineates the outcomes or findings of the research conducted thus far. Finally, the abstract concludes with a statement highlighting the project's implications and contributions to the respective field. The adherence to the prescribed word limit for the abstract (500 - 575 words) is imperative, as it serves as the cornerstone for acceptance of paper presentations at international research conferences. Abstracts undergo peer review, with authors notified of acceptance via email. Keywords should be provided, leaving a single-line space below the abstract text. The abstract should be submitted in the format of MS Word (.doc or .docx) document.
